This week: Homes with a history

1 ◀ Manchester, Conn. Preservation architect Jared Edwards spent 13 years upgrading and restoring the Philip Cheney Mansion, a Gilded Age estate designed by Stanford White and reconstructed in 1928 by Charles Adam Platt. The nine-bedroom home has carved wood panels, painted walls, ceiling frescoes from a Viennese palace, nine fireplaces, a grand salon, a cigar room-library, and a chef's kitchen. The property includes 7.5 acres of gardens. $2,450,000. Jeffrey Bodeau, William Raveis Real Estate/Luxury Portfolio International, (860) 463-9296

2 ▶ New York City As part of its ongoing complete restoration, the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, a global landmark, has converted 375 Tower units into condominiums. This two-bedroom home features a marble foyer, 10-foot ceilings, art deco doors, cove lighting, a gourmet kitchen, marble bathrooms, an AV technology closet, and multi-zone HVAC. Owners have access to private residential amenities, including the Starlight Pool and Starlight Terrace, as well as all services offered by the hotel. $6,500,000. Dan Tubb, Douglas Elliman, (212) 702-4000

3 ▶ Princeton, N.J. This six-bedroom Tudor was built in 1899 as a dairy barn for the Drumthwacket Estate. An update preserved many original details, including 26-foot ceilings, barn doors, and wooden support beams, while adding a chef's kitchen, mezzanine library, spiral staircase, gym, media room, and wine cellar. The 2-acre property has lawns, mature trees, and a landscaped gravel-and-stone central courtyard, and is minutes from a historic state park and a nature preserve. $3,950,000. Barbara Blackwell, Sotheby's International Realty, (609) 915-5000
